

at a glance...

They've always defied and stretched genres, but their new EP, produced by Nashville hit-maker Keith Follese' (Emerson Drive, Everfound, Faith Hill) is a glimpse into the influences of their songs. It perfectly captures the dynamics they're known for. Electronic flourishes meet undeniable organic hooks. 7 albums deep and featured on numerous compilations, they've become an established act opening for Plumb, Pillar, Bleach, Superhero, Jason Ingram, Satellite Soul, The Applesseed Cast and many others. Fronted by husband and wife Jared and Jennifer Adams, Annagail is that rare band of equal parts singer/songwriter and rock band that can comfortably hold their own with heavy hitters or in an intimate setting leading worship. Somehow, they make sense in all extremes. A blend of courage and frailty are embraced, and they're proud of both.

The talent is authentic. With the ability to adapt to any venue, they show themselves as consummate professionals – more worried about the audience than their egos. They have the veteran performer's gift of knowing how to banter with the audience without thinking they are standup comics. They know they are there for the music, and good music does not require explanations.

An intense season of life a few years ago, led the Adams, career artists mind you, to lay music down on the altar. It's hard to fathom with over a decade career behind them. Prolific writers and performers, they painfully eased into contentment to never play another note unless a divine hand brought the seed back to life. It came back indeed through no effort of their own. The signs were too miraculous not to follow. It's a story worth asking them to tell... Much of it revealed in the quintessential Annagail song 'If All I Had.' It's lyrics framing the journey of restoration and renewal. One only understood after coming face to face with surrendering the very passion of your heart, trusting a loving God knows what's best for you. Yearning to see freedom brought to broken hearts and weary lives, they desire to create an evening full of moments where, through the simple interaction of voices and ears, lives can be changed. Music, can't be touched, but can touch. Whether the Adams' front it alone or with a full band in tow, any venue any time – this group is worth the trip. Big stage or dirt floor, you're guaranteed an experience that's authentic.

-Derek Emerson Hope College Arts Coordinator // Holland MI

Featuring the current single "If All I Had"

Add Date: December 2nd, 2011

Label/Management //

Radio Promotions // TOP 5 PROMOTIONS Michael Johnson 615.595.7184 top5@integrity.com